NEW YORK, March 1 (Reuters). The theme of this year's St. Patrick's Day parade on March 17 in New York City will be England get out of Ireland," the organizers announced today. This and similar slogans will be inscribed on banners carried by the marchers, who have been told by the march committee that they may wear black arm bands and black rosettes "in memory of the 13 marmed civilians who were killed recently in Derry city by British soldiers."

More than 100,000 marchers, meluding 147 bands, are expected to take part in the parade up Fifth Avenue.

Britain Ends Power Cuts After 3 Weeks

LONDON March 1 (AP) -The British government announced tonight that power cuts—which put millions out of work for almost three weeks—would end at midnight.
The government said the move was a "calculated risk," which it believed "will come off provided consumers continue to use electricity sparingly and the weather stays mild."

The cuts began Feb. 10 when four weeks of a nationwide coal strike and picketing of power stations had reduced their stocks of fuel and chemicals.

The coal miners agreed last to accept a their pay dispute by a government-appointed court of inquiry that gave the miners a pay raise of more than 20 percent.

The ending of most restrictions on the use of electric power followed the resumption of supplies to the power stations.

A ban on floodlighting at sports events and on display advertising signs will continue. But Britain ended restrictions that forced plants to shut four days a week and homes to go without power for nine hours a day, three days a week, on a rotation basis throughout Britain. During the power famine, candies and Kernsena and butane lamps were sold at more than double their normal prices

The police reported a big increase in traffic accidents in the worst street blackout since World War II. But the authorities said there had been only a minor increase in crime.

Reforms Include Confiscation

Bhutto Tightens Limitations On Landowners in Pakistan granted to them as part of 2

RAWALPINDI, Pakistan, March 1 (AP) President Zullikar All Bhutto, heir of one of the country's largest land-owning families, today ordered a land reform reducing individual holdings by up to 70 percent.

In a broadcast, he said that farmers would be permitted to own a maximum of 150 acres of irrigated land and 1,000 of unitrigated land .

Previous limits established in 1959 by Gen. Mohammed Ayub Khan were 500 irrigated acres and 1,000 unirrigated acres, ...; Mr. Bhutto told his listeners that his scheme would "break the back of feudalism." The president once said that his family held hundreds of thousands of acres in his home province in Sind three centuries ago and now held about 4,000 acres

Second-Largest Pullout So Far

SAIGON, March 1 (AP).-The U.S. Command announced today second biggest troop cut of the Vietnam war-4,940 menleaving less than 10,000 infantrymen and artillerymen at enclaves in the Saigon, Cam Ranh Bay and Da Nang regions. Meanwhile, there was new fighting on the northern and eastern flanks of Saigon. The 3d Brigade of the 1st Air Cavalry Division, the only U.S. brigade remaining in the Saigon region suffered one killed and eight wounded in three small engagements ranging from 24 to 48 miles from the capital.

In all, 32 Army units and one small Air Force detachment were phased out in the latest troop reduction. The Army units in-cluded a half-dozen helicopter companies and squadrons with a total of more than 100 aircraft based in the Mekong Delta, the Saigon area and Da Nang. 6,895-Man Cut in July

The command said it was the largest single reduction since last July 1, when 6,095 troops were

The cutback reduced total U.S. strength to less than 120,000, from a peak of 543,000 in April, 1969, two months before President Nixon announced his program to disengage American forces from Vietnam. The number of infantry battalions has dropped to nine from a high of 112 and artillery battalions have been cut to two and two-thirds from a peak of 60, meaning that the United States will have to depend for the most part on its air power and South Vietnamese forces to stave off any major attacks.

The phaseout of the helicopter units leaves the United States with about 1200 helicopters, down from a high of 33,900.

Syria Jets Bomb Golan Posts After Attack by Israelis

TEL AVIV. March 1.—The Syrian Air Force bombed two Israeii settlements on the Golan Heights tonight after Israeli forces had pounded guerrilla targets in Syria with aircraft, artillery and tank fire, the military command reported.

A military spokesman said the Syrian planes, Soviet-made MiG-17 fets, inflicted neither damage nor casualties during their raids on the settlements in the southern Golan Heights. Israeli planes tried to intercept the MiGs and anti-aircraft fire was directed at the intruders, but

Parliament in Holland Urges Premier Not to Free 3 Nazis

THE HAGUE, March 1 (AP),-Parliament early today voted against the release of the last three Nazi war criminals held in the Netherlands.

After a marathon debate the Second Chamber (lower house), carried by a vote of 85 to 61 a motion strongly recommending that the government give up its intention to release the trio. Working on unanimous advice from the Supreme Court, the government had advised Parliament in favor of releasing Perdinand aus der Fuenten, 63, Joseph Eotaella. 65. and Franz Fischer, 71. Premier Barend Biesheuvel expressed hope that the cabinot would formulate a definite position when it meets Friday after seriously considering the motion.

inals. He assured Parliament that the trio "are still where they have been for a considerable time." This is the Breds Prison, where they were jailed for life after their death sentences were commuted.

The debate, which started yesterday afternoon, was only once interrupted by exclamations from Nazi victims in the public gallery. One shouted "Shame on you" at Justice Minister Dries Van Agt, 41, after he defended the proposed release, saying that con-tinuation of the detention did not serve any purpose. Thousands of Nazi victims have protested the government's advice to release the trio.

Background of Nazis

Aus der Fuenten was sentenced to death in 1950 after being found responsible for the "death in terrible circumstances" of 100,000 Dutch Jews, mainly from Amsterdam, in the Auschwitz extermination camp.

Kotaella, known as the hangman of the Dutch concentration camp of Amersfoort, was convicted on charges including torture of prisoners. In Breda Prison, he married Margarete Adelheid Samol of Fulda in 1967. Fischer was found guilty of the SAIGON, March 1 (NYT).— The South Vietnamese govern-ment approved of the final Chinese-American communiqué and felt that it upheld American commitments to South Vietnam, this nation's foreign minister said today in his government's first official reaction to President Nixon's visit to China.

The foreign minister, Tran Van Lam, looking relaxed and confident, said in an interview that he was "relieved" that President Nixon's journey was over and that speculation about what might come out of it was now ended.

"We fully approve of Mr. Nixon's trip," Mr. Lam said, adding: "No one can deny that it helped create an atmosphere of eased tensions."

Mr. Lam spoke after a morning cabinet meeting presided over by President Nguyen Van Thieu had discussed the final com-munique issued in Shanghai three days ago by President Nixon and Chinese Premier Chou Enlai. Mr. Thieu and his close associates were reported to be pleased that Mr. Nixon apparently had not made any concessions to the Chinese on Vietnam.

House Panel Says Kissinger Preempts Role of State Dept.

By Benjamin Welles

WASHINGTON, March 1 (NYT). — Henry A. Kissinger, Agency in recent years," Rep. President Nixon's adviser on I get briefed on strategic weaponry the CIA gives the impresnational security, was severely criticized yesterday by members of Congress, who accused him at preempting the State Department's traditional role in formulating U.S. foreign policy.

Rep. Wayne L. Hays, D., Ohio, chairman of the Foreign Affairs subcommittee on State Depart-ment organization and foreign operations, charged that Mr. Kls-singer had "taken over the poli-cy-making functions of the State Department."

Department."

"He and his ever-growing National Security Council stail are making policy," Rep. Hays charged. "He's flown off on 12 or 14 secret trips. He's got a string of 25 or 30 starlets he takes out. He seems to pack 36 hours into every day where the rest of us have only 24."

Rep. Hays's comments came as william B. Macomber jr., deputy under secretary of state for management, appeared before the subcommittee to ask authoriza-tion for a $563.4-million budget for the department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973.

This was the first time that the department has been obliged to seek authorization from Congress for its annual operating budget as well as requesting appropriation of the funds.

The new requirement results from an amendment to the Foreign Assistance Act of 1971, sponsored by Sen. J. William Ful-bright, D., Ark, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Sen Fulbright has long sought to make the State Department as responsible to the two congressional committees principally involved with foreign policy as it has traditionally been to the two appropriations committees, whose members are normally less versed in foreign affairs.

Much of Sen. Fulbright's 'nsistence has been based on mounting irritation over Mr. Kissinger's persistent unwillingness to testify before Congress—ex-cept in strict privacy and infor-mally. From the tone of remarks made at the hearings, the senstor's irritation appears to be shared by several senior members of the House subcommittee.

Subcommittee members re-peatedly called on Mr. Macomber to help strengthen the State Department's "primacy" in foreign policy and, by implication, to stave off what many called the National Security Council's in-roads into the foreign policy pro-Rep. All three measures contain language directing the President to instruct U.S. representatives to the three banks to vote against loans to nations seizing U.S. property without compensation. Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R., N.Y., said he believed this language was too rigid, but that the President apparently would still retain some flexibility on issuing such instructions for retaliatory action.

The Rouse Banking Committee opened hearings on the gold bill today and is scheduled to vote on it next Monday. Treasury Secretary John B. Connally, presenting the administration's case before the House committee, said today that despite the recent de facto devaluation of the dollar, it might take two years or more for the nation's international payments to return to balance or surplus. He also warned the congress men against expecting a major rise in U.S. exports to China as a result of President Nixon's effort to improve relations. "The thought that there will be a sudden golden horn of plenty as a result of trade with China is a fantasy," he said. While Americans, "always in-trigued by something made somewhere else," probably will buy a good many Chinese products, he said, there is no great hope that China will buy much in the way of U.S. goods. Douglas also asked the FBI in October, 1970, to clear his Army record "so that I can settle out West and it will look as though I just returned from Asia, etc. His request for remuneration for the information he had been providing the FBI since early June, 1970, is spelled out in a copy of a letter written by Douglas under the code name "Pete" and given to defense lawyers Monday evening by the prosecutors. Chief prosecutor William S. Lynch, in an interview, denied that the government met Douglas's terms. "Can you really conceive that they were met? If they were met. I wouldn't be here,' said Mr. Lynch. A defense motion asking that Douglas's testimony be suspended until the government provided full disclosure of Douglas's de-mands and whether they were met was quickly denied by U.S. District Judge R. Dixon Herman.

Led to Charges

Douglas's carrying of letters for the Rev. Philip Berrigan and Sister Elizabeth McAlister and his recollections of conversations with four other defendants led to the charges that the anti-war activists conspired to kidnap presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger, to bomb tunnels under federal buildings in Washington and to raid draft offices in several states. By the time Douglas wrote the letter to "Molly," apparently a code name for the FBI agent he regularly reported to in Lewisburg, he already was receiving money from the FBL. The letter

"After my cover is gone," he wrote the FBI before he left prison, "I will need an honorable discharge from the Army so that can settle out West.

through before and after the trial or trials, I request a minimum reward of $50,000 [tax free]. Five thousand to be paid me the first week in December, 1970, and the rest at the start of trial or when things are blown open. Douglas suggests in his letter to "Molly" that he may use the money to "continue at a university or go into a small business out West." He acknowledges that the figure "may sound a little high, but considering everything. I feel it is worth it to the government and it will make a life for me. "I will do all I can to help the government obtain enough evi-

Leader Tells Black Muslims 'You Don't Need a Shotgun'

CHICAGO, March 1 (WP),-The aging leader of the Black Muslims, ignoring threats against both him and his organization, called on his followers Saturday to focus their attention on economic development.

"We want to own [Chicago's] South Side and we can't have South Side unless we but the South Side." Elijah Muhammad, leader of the Nation of Islam, told nearly 15,000 blacks here for the 42d anniversary of the founding of the group. He also reiterated the longstanding Muslim theme of nonviolence by saying "You don't need a shotgun."

Irving Ordered To Court for 'Fake' Libel Suit

NEW YORK, March 1 (AP) --Author Clifford Irving yesterday was directed to show cause in Manhattan Supreme Court Friday why a default judgment for $160 million should not be entered against him and why he should not be punished for contempt.

Charles Moerdler, an attorney representing art dealer Ferdinand Legros, who brought two libel suits against Mr. Irving and two publishers, obtained the showcause order.

The action arises out of a book by Mr. Irving entitled "Fake." Mc-Graw-Hill, which is a defendant in a $55-million libel suit, published the hard-cover edition and Dell Publishing Co., a defendant in a $105-million suit, published the paperback edition.

On Feb. 10, Justice Jacob Mar-kowitz directed Mr. Irving to appear in Maniattan Supreme Court last Thursday for examination. Mr. Irving failed to comply.

Meanwhile, Robert A. Maheu, former aide to Howard Hughes, appeared before a grand jury probing Mr. Irving's disputed au-tobiography of the billionaire in-dustrialist.

Calif. City Wants Howard Hughes To Move Plywood Aircraft

LONG BEACH, Calif., March 1.—The Long Beach Harbor Commission said yesterday that it would not renew Howard Hughes's $36,000-a-year lease on a hangar for his famous "Spruce Goose," stored there since 1947. Mr. Hughes has until March 4, 1973, to remove the plane and restore the site for use as a deep-water tanker terminal. Once the largest airplane in the world, the Hughes Hercules was flown only once-for about one minute in 1947 with Mr. Hughes at the controls-before being placed in the hangar where it has been hidden from view ever since.

It has a wingspan of 320 feet and weighs 140 tons. When the commission extended the lease a year ago, the Hughes Tool Co. was told that it would be the last time.

A request for a new extension on the 7.2-acre site was turned

The federal government paid Mr. Hughes $18 million to develop the plane and Mr. Hughes claimed to have spent an additional $22 million of his own money in its construction. Mr. Hughes leases the all-plywood plane from the government for $800 a month. But it was learned that the aircraft might be put on the auction block when his lease expires in

Women's Rights and Opportunities

Women in the United States, in this latter half of the 20th century, want to step down from their pedestals, take off their yashmaks and be treated as ordinary personswith rights, responsibilities and opportunities equal to those of male citizens. If there are some disadvantages as well as advantages to that equality, women are prepared to face them and accept them. They are more interested in being respected than in being worshiped, more concerned with a fair chance to take care of themselves than with being cared for by paternalistic males whose concern may not be altogether paternal.

So, granted that there are differences between men and women, why shouldn't they be treated as equals, equally capable of looking out for their own interests? There is a plethora of rhetoric in the answers to this rhetorical question. What a relief it would be if opponents of the Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution, approved by the House and soon to come before the Senate, expresed their opposition candidly as opposition instead of camouflaging it as a form of old-world gallantry or father-knows-best

Consider Sen. Sam Ervin jr., D., N.C., whose good intentions can hardly be doubted but who has been trying to gut the Equal Rights Amendment by modifying it to permit legal distinctions based on "physiological or functional differences" between the sexes. The courtly senator wishes women well; he seeks simply to save them from the danger of military conscription. But why should he do so? Perhaps if they were equally exposed to the draft, the country would be less disposed to send its youth into faraway military adventures.

Or, consider the AFL-CIO, whose intentions may be a little more open to question and whose spokesman on Capitol Hill says portentously that the Equal Rights Amendment would have a "potentially destructive impact on women's labor legislation"-meaning that it would put an end to such restrictions as maximum hour laws for women, prohibitions on night work, limits on weights to be lifted, and restraints on employment in coal mines. All of this protective wrapping of women in cotton wool has the clear effect-and the almost equally clear purpose-of hobbling women in the competition for jobs which men mean to reserve for Consider, in addition, all those moralistic limitations upon women which keep them from working in an atmosphere which men consider too indelicate for them-as bartenders, for example. The hypocrisy entailed in the "protection" of women would be ludicrous if it did not entail so serious a handicap in their struggle for a livelihood and for the full realization of their capabilities and their aspirations.

It would be a boon indeed if the cant on this subject could be excluded from the coming Senate debate. There are those who ardently wish to confine women to a role as the obedient helpmates of men in the maintenance of hearth and home. There is, to be sure, a good deal to be said (from the male point of view) for this arrangement. Only nobody is going to come right out and say it on the Senate floor. They'll say solemnly instead they mean to keep the "girls" hobbled for their own good.

Reconciliation in Sudan

The secessionist war that has raged for 16 years in the southern area of Sudan has never become such an international cause celebre as similar struggles in Katanga, Biafra, Bangladesh or Ulster. But it has rivaled and perhaps outdone them all in bitterness, brutality and bigotry.

Possibly a half-million lives have been iost as three rebellious southern provinces were devastated in fighting between largely pagan southern tribesmen and the Moslem northerners. The latter form a majority of the Sudan's population and have controlled the government at Khartoum since independence was proclaimed in 1956. The struggle has eaten deeply into the country's resources and has contributed to periodic political upheavals.

President Gaafar Numeiri's government has at last reached an accord with rebel leaders that promises to end the conflict by granting the southerners a larger measure of autonomy while still preserving national unity. If the new arrangement can be made to work, which is still a matter of considerable doubt in view of the historic divisions between northerners and southerners and of the differences among the southerners themselves, the Sudanese for the first time would be free to devote their energies fully to the development of the country's considerable resources.

If successful, Sudan's new experiment in unity with diversity might even offer a useful guide to the many other underdeveloped nations similarly afflicted with racial, religious and other corrosive domestic divisions. THE NEW YORK TIMES.

International Opinion

After Peking Journey

Was President Nixon fooled in Peking? To this question, American conservatives, who have been opposed to the trip to China from the outset, respond affirmatively. Even some liberals feel the President made too many concessions without obtaining much in exchange. Yet Americans on the whole continue to consider the Peking trip as a success. Nixon would have liked not to have the agreement on Talwan included in the communiqué. But Chou En-lai was categoric: the American commitments concerning Taiwan would be made public or the negotlations would end in failure. Nixon needed a concrete result to offer American opinion. He yielded. At first sight, then, he is the loser on that score; but the text of the communiqué was drafted in such a way that the U.S. has plenty of elbow room.

-From France-Soir (Paris). * * *

The communiqué brings no major surprise and this is why one can say it was received in the United States without emotion or enthusiasm. The text makes it clear that what President Nixon obtained from his Chinese counterparts is really the minimum that could be expected. This does not at all mean that the mission will be interpreted —From Le Figaro (Paris).

The most important part of the communique is probably the promise that the contact which has been resumed after such a long interval will be continued. This will be done both by the occasional visits to Peking of a senior U.S. representative—probably Dr. Kissinger who has the right kind of mind for this task-and through other channels. Taiwan and other policy disagreements have perhaps made a resumption of full diplomatic relations impossible—yet,

Gibraltar and Spanish Dignity

With his deportment as a gentleman, his courtesy and his good manners, Sir Alec Douglas-Home gave us an image of openness of British diplomacy. But his words have reflected another face of this diplomacy: An absolute misunderstanding of the country where he was and the people to whom he addressed himself. This can only be explained, without justification naturally, as an incomprehensible diplomatic fault that has injured Spanish dignity.

Sir Alec, you have been mistaken about the Spanish people, and Great Britain has been mistaken for two centuries in refusing to return Gibraltar which was stolen from us. Anyone who had illusions now knows that behind the smiles and good manners. the man from the Foreign Office wants to perpetuate injustice.

The trouble is, of course, that no one believes the Israelis can ever hope completely and permanently to clear up the guerrilla threat short of a full-scale occupation of south Lebanon. ### Hartke Bill Seen From Abroad

By E. Ernest Goldstein and Philip W. Whitcomb

PARIS-Would the proposed from which no form of double-Hartke-Burke restrictions on foreign commerce have as disastrous an economic affect on America's overseas economy in the 1970s as King George's measures had on that of the colonies

Before answering that question, one may also ask what is Hartke-Burke. Sen. Vance Hartke, D., Ind., and Rep. James A. Burke, D., Mass., have introduced legislation under the title 'Foreign Trade and Investment Act of 1972" (IHT Feb. 29) which would curb the international activities of U.S. companies in the mistaken belief that such curbs would save jobs for American workers. The legislation has the backing of the AFL-CIO, which has abandoned its traditional support of a liberal trade policy for one of economic isolationism and protectionism. But now back to our original question—Is Hartke-Burke as bad as George III's colonial policy?

The enswer is an anguished "yes" in the opinion of the oldest American Chamber of Commerce overseas, established in Paris seventy-eight years ago and today representative of U.S. exports to Prance totalling over a billion dollars a year, and of industrial investments in 350 U.S.-controlled factories which bring American investors a return of 7 or 8 percent on net worth.

The number of individual Americans on whom King George's controls were imposed was much the same as the number of U.S. citizens who would be directly hit by the Hartke-Burke restrictions today: about a million and a half now living and working outside the United States—without counting over half a million in, or dependent on, the armed forces.

No Vote

This segment of the U.S. population, as numerous as the combined populations of Alaska. Nevada, Vermont and Wyoming, already has to cope with problems of which taxation without representation is only the beginningat present, with few exceptions, they can vote neither at home nor

No matter how hard these Americans work to strengthen their country's prestige and to increase and protect its participation in the free world economy, their country still bars them from most of the advantages which U.S. citizenship and taxes are supposed to bring. They are de-prived of American education for their children, Medicare, and numerous tax deductions and benefits available only to U.S. residents. They are subject in many cases to controls over the investment and exchange of their own funds.

Many Americans at home, perhaps even many members of Congress, still think of their fellow citizens abroad as living in the world of travel folders, charter tours and National Geographic phenomena. The reality is unlike the advertisement.

U.S. citizens employed abroad to integrate an American enterprise into the local economy, thus enabling their country to obtain its fair share not merely of domestic growth but also of world growth, live a life of tangible isolation during their years abroad.

At his work, the American is usually one of only two or three other Americans in a total of from 200 or 2,000 or 3,000 workers. He must go far to find his church, even if one of the 131 American overseas churches is anywhere near him. He must send his children to expensive private schools, parhaps away from home, if they are not to grow up as foreigners. His taxes are invariably heavier than those at home, partly because of the heavy indirect taxes, such as the cascading sales tax taxation treaty provides relief. France for example, obtains over 73 percent of its total tax revenue from indirect taxes, only 1.7 percent from salary taxes, and 24.8 percent from other direct taxes. (The United States obtains 80 percent of its fiscal revenue from direct income taxes.) Everything that links him with his own country costs far more than at home—a brief holiday back in Vermont or Alabama, even American periodicals and books. It's not a travel-folder

Gesture Wiped Out

For these Americans abroad. the Eartke-Burke bill, begins by almost wiping out the one small gesture which their country had made in consideration of the overseas taxpayer's share in strengthening the U.S.'s world economic position—the provision that on the first $20,000 of salary earned abroad ($25,000 if the forelgn residence lasted at least three years) they would have no U.S. income tax to pay, thus leaving that portion of their foreign salatax. The United States is one of the very few countries to impose any taxes at all on salaries earned abroad.

Even if personal hardships are disregarded on the ground that a loyal citizen should be proud to suffer a variety of discriminations and difficulties either for the honor of sharing in the strengthening of his country's economy, or for some personal reason of his own, the American Chamber of Commerce in France points out that the blow struck at America's international position by Hartke-Burke is a heavy one.

economy which the bill gravely threatens, though increasing no faster than the world economy itself, is vital both to the U.S. economy at home and to the U.S. world position. That share can only be weakened by Hartke-Burke.

What are the precise ways in which the Hartke-Burke bill would choke American participation in the world economy, at this most unsuitable point in our economic development when the dollar's reputation, if not perhaps the dollar itself, is trembling? First, the power to alter or limit imports from foreign countries and to control dumping is taken out of the hands of Congress and the Treasury Department, and even, it seems, from the control of the Supreme Court, by the creation of a new three-man Foreign Trade and Investment Commission, and still more by giving to the President, on his sole authority, the power to conclude bilateral or multilateral agreements effecting quantitative restraints on imports.

These new powers would lead to prompt retaliation by other countries. Foreign trade would be throttled and American industry would suffer just as surely as would business in Evansyille if that city's economic relations with Indianapolis, Chicago and Atlanta were choked by controls.

Second, Hartke-Burke would place the right of an American citizen or corporation to transfer capital or patents to a person or corporation abroad, whether American or not, under the con-trol of the President whenever in his judgment the transfer would result in a net decrease in employment in the United States." To strip American citizens of their rights of decision and action and transfer them to a single man, even a President, would still further isolate the United States

Third, the Chamber finds a strong flavor of industrial espionage, or, more bluntly, snooping, the Hartke-Burke provision that all American employers with

from the world economy.

at least a 10 percent interest in company established in some other sovereign state should be obliged by United States law to report on "conditions of workers" employed abroad by such foreign corporations. The implication is that the Japanese, the French, the West Germans or the Russians, for example, could then legitimately use their nationals who work in the United States as sources of information which under normal procedure is properly transmitted only to and through such organizations as the OECD or the United Nations agencies. The conclusion of the American Chamber of Commerce in France is definite. The adoption by Congress of the Hartke-Burke Foreign Trade and Investment Act of 1972 would cripple the goose that lays the golden eggs of American participation in the free world economy sharply brake the world activities of the United States at the very time! when those of the enlarged European Community and of Japan are gathering speed, and push American foreign trade, and with it the American dollar, fartherdown the slope that leads to a

The Peking Journey Nixon's Finest Hour

By James Reston

W history of the Nixon ad-ministration is finally written, the chances are that his China policy will stand out as a mode! of common sense and good di-

For the moment, he is being criticized for giving away too much on Talwan, for troubling the Japanese and the Russians, and for playing politics with the great issues of war and peace, but in the larger perspectives of history, these are likely to be seen as secondary issues.

The main thing is that he personally identified one of the great problems of American foreign policy—the isolation and hostility of China—and by over three years of patient effort, brought it to an end.

He has not settled anything with China, and he has undoubtedly unsettled a lot of things in Tokyo and Moscow along the way, but he will be going to Moscow in late May and undoubtedly to Tokyo later in the summer, and if he handles his problems there as well as he did in Peking, the atmosphere of world politics should be a little better by the end of the year.

Easy to Condemn

If you assume that the cold war is a permanent condition of life—as many intelligent and sincere men and women do-it is easy to condemn Nixon's opening to China and Chancellor Willy Brandt's opening to the Soviet Union, but Nixon and Brandt are trying to dismantle the cold war and go from there to a more dependable world order. And even if they fail, which is quite possible, the historians of the future are likely to praise them for trying.

Moscow is suspicious of the President's China trip, for the Peking mission has dramatized China's emergence on the world scene and suggests that the United States is playing the old British game of throwing its influence, if not its power, on the side of the weaker nation—specifically on the side of China, Moscow's ideological adversary.

If this is what the men in the Kremlin think, they are probably right, for Nixon undoubtedly is playing balance of power politics in Asia as his predecessors since the last war did in Europe. He is arguing against the domina-tion of the Pacific basin by any nation, the United States and the Soviet Union included. And to create a new order in Asia ne needs at a minimum not only the absence of war, but the cooperation of all the major Asian powers, the Soviet Union, Japan and China.

It is going to take a lot of time even to explore the possibilities of such a Pacific system, and Nixon has completed only the first phase of his journey. Japanese, of all people, owe him a little patience before deciding that he is acting against their

Nixon's report on the China trip from the plane's side when he returned to Washington tried to put these questions in some per-spective. He dropped the exaggerated talk about the "week that changed the world." and talked common sense to the American people for a change.

There was no pretense this time that anything fundamental had been settled in China. The differences were conceded and defined. The deadlocks on Taiwan and Vietnam, and the ideological conflicts over aggression and liberty were stated clearly and accurately, and the difficul-ties ahead were acknowledged.

Nixon even admitted that such candor at the summit of world politics was "unique." "This communiqué." he said. "was unique in honestly setting forth differences rather than trying to cover them up with diplomatic double-

If the Peking trip did nothing more than reopen communication and introduce some plain and civil talk between Washington and Peking, it would have been worthwhile. But it did more than that.

Cuts Away Musions

It cut away some of the illusions of the past generation, which have contributed to both the Korean and Vietnam wars. It cast at least some doubt on the Chinese conviction that the American armies in Korea and Vietnam were aiming at the destruction of the Peking regime. and on the American fear that China was embarked on a campaign to expand its authority all over East Asia and Southeast Asia.

It did not remove the Chinese anxiety over the rising military power of the Soviet Union and the expanding economic power of Japan, but it must have reduced was planning to detach Taiwan from China and use it as an American military base of operations on China's southern flank.

None of this would have happened without Nixon's personal initiative in reaching out to China over the last three years, fairness, he has to visit both despite his own anti-Communist Tokyo and Moscow before his record and the opposition of purpose is made clear, and the powerful elements within his own courage and negotiating skill. He has changed his direction, his policy, and the tone of his diplomacy, and there are few people tactical blunders en route to in this capital today who don't Peking. By sending Dr. Henry A. welcome the change.

Chinese Threat

R.P. Sullivan, in his "Peking Journey" letter (IHT, Feb. 26-27) western youth knows nothing of China and then proceeded to ask the question: "When, how, and to whom has China ever been a national threat?"

I admit it is difficult to get this information today, but could quote from my "Every Child's History Book" on your ques-

"In the course of their 4,000 years of history, the Chinese made the un-neighborly gesture of invading Korea on a number of occasions—the latest of which was in 1950, causing the United Nations to publicly label them as aggressors." Also, "The Indians also could have considered the Red Dragon more than a "paper-tiger" when they were pushed back from their borders by Red China in 1967.

But the most ungaliant of China's "national threats" was reserved for Thet in 1959. This ancient mountain kingdom a country nearly half as large as India—had been conquered already once in 1720 by China. Although it had been independent again since 1913, it accepted with only token resistance the new Maoist regime in 1951. When it had second thoughts about this arrangement in 1959, it was simply swallowed whole. P. PETRONE

Although the Sino-American detente is thus hopefully confirmed, the march to a true mutual understanding is still very long indeed. One major obstacle among others is the fact that the Chinese way of life today turns out to be so hard and pure as that of the early Christians that normal Western visitors often meet with difficulties of adapta-tion. It would therefore be a good compromising solution for the American and European peacemakers in the scientifis, cultural, commercial and other domains to choose Hong Kong. the geographically best situated city for this purpose, as a base and make frequent visits inside Actors cling to it, as if to life. They lean against it, swing on it, lie on it, even pull up its folds and sit on it. Hamlet coyly chides the fatuous Polonius by darting around it as it swings freely. When Claudius and Gertrude mount their thrones, swordpoints are magically thrust through the curtain to serve as heir menacing armrests.

The entire production slaged over considerable opposition—is stripped down by Yuri Lyubimov, director of the Taganka Theater, for maximum impact on modern Soviet audiences and to engage them in what he sees as the central drams: the enraged young prince's fight against evil rule and hypocrisy.

"The play is a classic because it is so eternal," Mr. Lyubimov explained after a performance.

"Each generation finds something in it for itself, and if the world continues this madness" of destroying itself, "even the last people in the world will play 'Hamlet.'

"If it ever stops sounding contemporary, if it does not stir a conditions and it is dead as a classic. If it does not make people think about themselves, there is no point in playing it."

He paused to be sure his meaning was fully absorbed and then rushed on enthusiastically to the "To be or not to be" speech, which in the Lyubimov-Vysotsky version is more like a lecture to the audience, given twice for emphasis, than a philosophical soliloguy.

"Hamlet is a very decent man severe in criticizing himself for inaction," Mr. Lyubimov continued. "He is afraid of death, We are all afraid of death, losing careers, of the unknown. That is why we tolerate evil. The Moment

"You noticed all the skulls in the play," he asked. "We used in several scenes to make people think of the moment of death. Maybe if you think more about that, maybe you will be more decent in your life."

Mr. Lyubimov's break with the traditional Hamlet has roused controversy, as did his selection of Mr. Vysotsky for the title role. Inevitably, he ruffled feelings by using the play within the play as a vehicle for a stinging satire on the pompous, academic some Moscow Art Theater performances today. But for years Mr. Lynbimov has been in and out of political and artistic controversy.

His daring has won him acclaim from foreign as well as Soviet dramatists and actors, who have scrawled felt-pen tributes on his office walls. "What a vital and vibrant theater, so rich in exuberant production ideas and talents." Olivier wrote in 1965. Mr. Lyubimov, invited to the United States but uncertain whether he will be allowed to go this year, itches to tackle even more controversial works-Andrei Voznesensky's "Watch Your Faces," quickly closed two years ago after offending the censors; "Alive," an adaptation of Boris Mozhayev's story of an independent-minded peasant who tries to quit a collective farm, and Bulgakov's sharp satire of the Stalinist era, "Master and Marguerita."

But during a theatrical season in which his rival, the Sovrmennik (Contemporary) Theater, has been denied permission so far put on a bold performance "Macbeth" with evident contemporary overtones, Mr. Lyubimov has been unable to get permission to put these three plays into rehearsal.

An Alliterative Array of Abominable Aliments

PARIS.—Man will eat anything. Babies put anything within reach in their mouths. It is usually assumed that adults exercise more discrimination. But that is a debatable proposition. An animal that will feed on ambergris or asafetida can boggle at little else. Here is a swift listing of some of the more exolic substances which have been, or are being, eaten deliberstely by human beings: Acorn: This is best consumed by man via the pig, which thrives on it. Some of the most succulent ham in the world comes from Emilia - Romagna, Italy, where the red pigs the ancient Romans knew still forage in the oak forests, which were also there in ancient times. But pigs can overdo. They have on occasion been polsoned by a too generous or too exclusive diet of acorns, which apparently include toxic element, not yet identified, which affects the kidneys.

Unimpressed by this danger, man has frequently had recourse in periods of famine to the acorn, of which some species are directly edible for him. It is probable that in earlier times he ate acorns even when other foods were not lacking. Prehistoric kitchen middens give evidence that the acorn was eaten by man in Asia before cereals were cultivated there. That they may also have been consumed in Europe is suggested by the fact that the word "acorn" comes from the Gothic "akran." which meant simply "fruit" or "vield."

roasted acorn flour is used there to make ersatz coffee. The crushed roasted acorns of the ilex oak go into a complicated Arab beverage called "racahout". Aluaca: This Andean member the camel family is raised chiefly for its wool, which Peruvian Indians were weaving into cloth before the white man Europeans struggled with it unsuccessfully for a couple of centuries until an Erglishman named Titus Salt found out what to do with it in 1836. Alpaca meat is quite good to eat, but because of the Ant: Not usually considered as a food in developed countries. except by humorists making bad jokes about picnics—unless you count the ants preserved in oil which medieval pharmacies in Europe sold as aphrodisiacs. Nevertheless, ants are eaten with relish in a number of countries. In Africa they are swallowed raw, even the small common or picuic ants, considered the least aboard the Beagle, particularly nalatable. In Asia they are served in sauces. In Colombia and Venezuela, rural populations, expecially those of the jungles, catch during the spring swarming season the reportedly nutritious ants called "culones" ("big bottoms." from their swollen abdomens), which are fried in oil or fat, and are considered a great delicacy. I am told on mediocre authority that some New York shops dealing in exotic foods offer chocolate-covered ants, but I have not myself encountered them. I must admit that I did not try very hard.

Antimony: A brilliant silvery metal, fortunately (since it is dangerously toxic) no longer introduced into the human system except rarely as a medicine. This was not the case in the Middle Ages, when medieval scholars observed that antimony was instrumental in purifying gold and, arguing from analogy, assimed that it would also free the human body of its impurities. Paracelsus wrote: "Just as antimony purifies gold and leaves no slag in it, in the same form and shape it purifies the human body." The 14th-century Ger-man monk Basil Valentine chimed in: "Let men know that antimony purgeth gold and frees it from all foreign matter and also by an innate power effects the same in men and beasts." In this belief antimony was fed cattle to fatten them, and The acorns of certain kinds if it killed them instead, current thinking attributed this to witchcraft,

Monks ate andmon⊽ counteract the effects of fasting, and as a result so many were their addition to wine by the ancient Romans to neutralize fatally poisoned that it was se jously suggested that the word antimony was composed of the heading of food. In Sicily, the prefix "anti" plus "monos," one who lives alone, hence a "mostarda," unrelated to the Cremona relish of the same name, hermit, hence a monk-making the word mean "anti-monk" or "dangerous to monks." twig ashes, grapejuice, mustard Armadillo: Nature invented

American Indians relish its flesh, but Alexandre Dumas thought it unpalatable for Europeans because of its musky taste. This was not perceived by Charles Darwin, who found that it tasted like duck, and noted that it was a favorite food and a rich mixture of spices, especially cinnamon. This pro-duces a dark jelly, whose taste, because of the spices, vaguely resembles that of American pumpkin pie (the homemade kind, not the version offered in good when roasted in its shell. # The Year In Review

...a clear lesson for every American

(An excerpt from the 1971 Annual Report of First Chicago Corporation to its stockholders)

For the nation, 1971 was a year of economic recovery and growth, spurred by expansive governmental policies, but overshadowed by the greatest monetary crisis since World War II.

The crisis came with a rush in the spring of the year, as the U.S. balance of trade plunged toward its first deficit since 1888, triggering a massive flight from the dollar and enormously widening the deficit in our balance of payments.

Such climactic developments called for bold corrective action, perhaps long considered, but now both necessary and politically possible. On August 15, the Administration suspended the official convertibility of dollars into gold, levied a 10 percent surcharge on imports, imposed the first peacetime wage-price freeze in the nation's history, and set forth a series of tax reductions to speed recovery.

Although the crisis came on with startling suddenness, it had been more than 20 years in the making, as we spent more abroad than we earned abroad and piled up deficits in our balance of payments year after year:

U.S. Balance of Payments ($ BILLIONS) - 10 -15 -20 -'50 '55 '65 '60

Along the way, we had used up all but about $10 billion of our gold reserve, and built up short-term foreign dollar claims of more than $60 billion against it, until finally in 1971 our national profligacy became so apparent to the rest of the world that we were forced to agree to devalue the dollar in relation to other currencies.

As these dramatic events made front page headlines, the frequent question was what did it all mean for the individual family and average citizen. Perhaps French wine, Italian shoes, Japanese radios and German automobiles would cost more in dollars, and our products would cost less in foreign currencies. That seemed a small price to pay for straightening out a world monetary crisis, but it bought only time to solve our underlying problem, to improve our productivity at a rate that would bring our costs and prices into line with those of other countries.

For the events of 1971 stemmed from a simple human weakness in all mankind—and showed that we had given way to this weakness more than others.

We all want to have and consume or give away more than we are prepared to produce. This weakness, common to individuals and families the world over, may also infect nations and governments as they attempt to respond to the desires of their people.

The United States, having long enjoyed the highest standard of living in the world and maintained this superiority despite significant reductions in hours of labor at all levels, had come to accept it as its just due—a special birthright to which Americans were somehow entitled.

In 1971 we began to discover that the unique advantages that had contributed so much to our national life were no longer unique. Our large domestic market free from internal trade barriers, our ready access to low-cost raw materials, our high level of literacy and technological skills, our abundant capital resources —all these were still ours, but Western Europe and Japan had been building their strengths and now enjoyed many comparable advantages.

Culminating a long and gradual decline in our once-strong competitive position relative to the other leading nations of the world, reflecting a startling erosion due to our lagging productivity and rising prices in recent years, the events of 1971 offer a clear lesson for every American.

If we are to maintain our present level of living—let alone improve it at rates comparable to our competitors throughout the world—we are going to have to work harder, at all levels, invest more in productive equipment and negotiate more equitable trade agreements.

Restrictive practices, whether by corporations, labor unions or individuals, are equally harmful to our common interest.

Demands for disproportionate shares of production, whether in profits or wages, inevitably lift prices and make us less competitive in world markets.

Complacency with products or methods, respective of the source, further impairs our effectiveness.

. Defending and aiding the rest of the world without accepting a correlative decrease in other desirable expenditures-may seem magnanimous, but it is irresponsible.

The new parities established December 18 have restored some certainty to world currency values, but have not cured the underlying cause of our difficulties. For that, we need to get our costs and prices in line with world markets, and then we must offer-and insist that other nations offer-open markets and investment opportunities.

Our government has moved boldly on both fronts.

The wage-price freeze of Phase I and the lessened controls of Phase II have been reasonable attempts to slow the rise in our costs and prices, to curb inflation at home and make our prices more competitive throughout the world. But if the broad public support so evident for these first corrective measures gives way again to our common weakness, then the current devaluation of the dollar is but the first of several.

The import surcharge was sufficiently severe to obtain the attention and cooperation of other countries without engendering retaliation. Perhaps without ever expressing it just so, many nations had come to assume that Uncle Sam would forever act in the interests of the rest of the world, with no need to be concerned with his own domestic well-being. Our government's actions of last August 15 dispelled that notion, and more realistic pari-

Mes have since been worked out. Considerable skepticism remains as to the extent to which foreign markets (especially those of Europe and Japan) will be opened to American products, and as yet there is no evidence of the willingness of Japan to permit significant foreign investment.

Further measures may prove necessary, but the Nixon Administration has done about all that it could do at home and abroad in these

The great remaining questions are whether the American people are sufficiently concerned to accept continued restraint, either governmental or self-imposed, and whether our own and other nations are mature enough to work out truly reciprocal moves toward open markets and investment oppor-

The answers to these questions are supremely important, not only for an economically strong and productive United States, but for building interdependent economies and international understanding, peace and progress for all

Through all the drama and uncertainty as the world came to grips with these great questions in 1971, the U.S. economy continued to improve, slowly but surely, setting the stage for an accelerating expansion in 1972.

Gross national product grew by about $26 billion or 234 percent in real terms. The rate of inflation slowed to 4½ percent for the year as a whole, compared with 51/2 percent in 1970. Employment climbed to successive record highs in the last six months of the year, and more than 1.6 million new jobs were created, though growth of the work force held the rate of unemployment close to 6 percent.

Take-home pay and consumer spending increased about 8 percent, and personal saving continued at an unusually high level, over 8 cents out of every dollar. Record savings flows helped lift housing starts above the two million mark for the first time in history. Auto sales topped 10 million. Consumer borrowing also showed record increases, in contrast with the previous year's sluggish pace.

With roughly one-fourth of plant capacity still idle and sales outrunning inventories at year-end, business investment in plant, equipment and inventory appear finally to be turning upward behind the other indicators, all pointing to a significant pickup in business activity in 1972.

Overall government outlays increased about 6 percent, as expenditures by state and local governments rose 11 percent. Extraordinary federal budget deficits of $23 billion for fiscal 1971 and an estimated $38 billion for fiscal 1972 added to the monetary stimulus, which was so expansive through July that, although relatively neutral in the later months of 1971, it amounted to some 61/2 percent for the year as a whole and seems likely to be stimulative in 1972.

Three factors remain to thwart a fuller realization of the U.S. recovery and our international objectives: The first is a lack of public recognition of the progress made, lost sight of in the glare of 1971's more dramatic events and discounted in the common inclination to expect too much too soon. For though the economy can be slowed in a year's time (as the effects of the restrictive policies adopted in early 1969 were clearly recognizable by early 1970), it takes at least a year and a half to stimulate a sluggish economy and turn it in the opposite direction.

The second and more serious factor is unemployment, because it destroys human dignity. Full employment is one of our few expressed national goals. Regional specialization of our economy, the lack of job mobility and the de-escalation of military action all contribute to unemployment. Although some unemployment is inescapable, the present level is too high in human terms.

Yet, even as we say that, we must not overestimate either the precision or significance of the reported figures, for the method of compiling this statistic has not changed to take into account a fundamental change in the makeup of the work force. The proportion of women and teenagers (whose unemployment rates are always higher) has risen from 36 percent in 1960 to 42 percent in 1971—with a consequent upward distortion in the overall

Thus a more meaningful measure is the number of married men without jobs-3.3 percent at last report, for December. Even this level is disturbingly high. Furthermore the burden falls most heavily on those who can least withstand it. For example, unemployment among black married men was 5.2 percent in December, considerably worse than the 3.1 percent unemployment among white mar-

Economic policy must reduce unemployment, but policies sufficiently stimulative to bring the overall index down to these levels would be extremely inflationary.

A more reasonable rate of expansion, coupled with more adequate programs to sustain, retrain and place the unemployed, might serve the national interest better and bring overall unemployment down to 5 percent by the end

Underestimation of the recovery and overestimation of unemployment—these first two factors are interrelated, and together give rise to our third and still more serious consideration-the continuing pressure on the Administration to stimulate the economy further. which would only lead to more inflation.

Indeed, the stimulative forces already at work may lead to renewed inflationary pressures by the end of this year. Foreign governments, eyeing our massive budget deficits and expansionary policies, are even now beginning to wonder if the initial devaluation of the dollar was enough. They inquire whether we as a nation have learned enough from the climactic events of 1971 to accept the disciplines necessary to get our economic house in order.

Considering all that we have put ourselves through in the past three years for this very purpose—the restrictive policies of 1969, the self-induced recession of 1970, and the painful events of 1971—considering the price we have already paid and the far greater difficulties that lie ahead if we give way again to our old weakness-1972 can be a watershed year for the United States. It would be a tragedy if we fail to measure up.

Could Invest in U.S. Stocks

PARIS, March i (NYT). - A board of dollars to Japanese Chicago banker is dremming up companies to encourage them to support for a novel way to deal invest more in the United States. This represents another way of resolving the convertibility problem in a way that is satisfactory to the United States. More direct investments would increase jobs. Mr. Freeman goes well beyond this; however, with his startling vision of central banks as investors in U.S. industry. Under his plan, on instructions from the foreign institutions, the Treasury would put together $100-million packages of stocks that would be offered to central banks at a 10 percent discount from the purchase price.

Treasury Picks Up Tab The discount is designed to attract the foreign institution. The cost would be picked up by the asury, or in other words by the taxpayer. The foreign in-stitution would make a commitment not to sell the shares in the market over an extended

But the share packages could be transferred, as are special drawing rights and to much more limited extent gold, to other institutions for settlement of international accounts.

Mr. Freeman concedes that many problems are raised. Taxpayers might complain that U.S. assets were being given away for nothing. Labor might criticize it for making the rich richer with no fallout for the working man. (It would no doubt be bullish for Wall Street)

But Mr. Freeman, a banker who is known to be close to the Nixon administration, insists that, since the proposal is gaining some support in Europe, it should be seriously studied in central bank-

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES

ICI to Reduce Its Spending

Imperial Chemical Industries' capital expenditures this year will be lower in Britain and Europe than in 1970 and the company may have further layoffs in Britain, chairman E.J. Callard reports. He says spending should begin to increase again in 1973. "The trend is to sanction an increasing proportion of expenditure in North America and Western Europe." he adds. "but in many major tonnage products we still have a surplus." Mr. Callard notes there is overcapacity in nylon, polyesters, and some plastics such as polyethylene.

Japanese Vehicle Exports Rise

Japan's vehicle exports totaled 155,961 units in January, up 48.5 percent from a year earlier, but down 21 percent from the preceeding month the Japan Automobile Manufacturers Association reports. The exports were valued at $256.5 million, up 74.7 percent from a year earlier. Production totaled 425,170 units, up 8.5 percent from January 1970. The January export total included 118,646 passenger autos, up 54.9 percent; 36,433 trucks, up 31.7 percent and 876 buses, up 11 percent companies with a year earlier. cent compared with a year earlier.

Kansai Electric Power, of Japan, says it has developed a battery-powered. 70-passenger bus that is pollution-free and capable of covering 54 miles between charges at a maximum speed of 36 miles an hour. Kansai says the bus operates with 20 percent of the noise produced by a comparable diesel bus. ### Japan Studying Formation Of an Asian Clearing Union Its Loss in

The Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI) is studying the possibility of forming a clearing union for settling international trade accounts in Asia, Eimei Yamashita, director general of MITT's international trade bureau, said today. The study is regarded with some interest because Japan opposed the establishment of a regional clearing union when one was proposed by the United Nations Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East in

Mr. Yamashita said the Jananese have decided to re-examine the idea because it is believed Japan needs to have an alternative ready should international talks, expected to be held in 1973, fail to result in significant new steps toward trade liberalization on a global scale.

Japan's GNP Growth Rate Slows to 6.1%

TOKYO, March 1 (AP-DJ) -The growth in Japan's gross national product last year slowed to 6.1 percent in real terms and was the lowest since 1965, when it rose 4.7 nercent, the Economic Planning Agency estimated today. The rate has been 10 to 14 percent in recent years.

In money terms, the GNP totalled 78,627.6 billion yen ($255 billion). The agency at tributed the low growth rate to poor performances in both private and inventory invest-

Bank Rate Cut By Belgium, Holland to 4%

BRUSSELS, March 1 (Reuters). -Belgium and Holland today cut their bank rates to 4 from 4 1/2 percent in twin moves to stop speculative dollar inflows and stimulate economic activity. For Belgium it was the third time the rate has been cut in eight weeks. Holland has now done it twice in the same period. A statement from the Belgian central bank said the cut was necessary to keep Belgian interest rates in line with the downward trend in major international money markets.

At the same time, the reduction was in line with the needs of the domestic economic situation and would make borrowing by companies cheaper, the bank said. Banking sources here said the Belgian and Dutch cuts would tend to protect the two from possible inflows of foreign funds from West Germany following last week's discount rat, cut there to 3 percent. The new rates come into effect

The Belgian national bank will also cut its rates for advances against collateral to a uniform 5 percent. These rates had previously ranged from 5 1 2 to 6 percent.

French Cut Expected PARIS, March 1 (AP-DJ).-The Belgian and Dutch bank rate cut has increased expectations for a reduction of the French rate which, at 6 percent, is the highest among industrialized countries.

growing in Europe and Latin America, he said, indicating that Japan may have to counter this trend by the establishment of a regional trade bloc in Asia. The original UN proposal, as formulated by a team headed by Robert Triffin of Yale University, would replace individual trade financing transactions, now carried out through commercial banks, with bookkeeping entries. After certain fairly short periods of time, only the net imbalances in the trade between various countries would be settled in foreign currency.

The advantage, Prof. Triffin explained in 1970, would be to reduce the cost of trade transactions and to eliminate dependence on foreign money-center banks for trade financing. Mr. Yamashita said MITI is nct necessarily proposing to recurrect the Triffin plan. Several alternatives are under consideration, he added. MITI's study, he said, is still in the initial stages and questions such as the number of countries that might participate in such a union and the settlement currency to be used have not been

Germany Blocks 40% of Credits Raised Abroad

BONN, March 1 (AP).-The government decreed today that business enterprises must make a 40 percent cash deposit at the central bank on most credits over two million deutsche marks (about $600,000) taken up abroad, The measure, adopted at a cabinet meeting, is retroactive to Jan. 1. the bank will bear no interest. Actual deposits will not be due before May. The move is aimed at counteracting inflows of foreign funds that have undermined the dollar's position on the foreign exchange market and driven it below the new central rate of 3.2225 DM Market experts doubt the effectiveness of the measure, however, arguing that even with application of the legislation, foreign credit is still cheaper than domestic credit. Certain credits in connection with foreign trade tranzactions will be exempt from the regulation. It will be up to the Bun-desbank's discretion to determine

It is commonly assumed that no-trump will be as successful as a four-four trump fit if both hands have 4-3-3-3 distribution. but this is not always true. On the diagramed deal, for instance, the bad trump break did not prevent South from making nine tricks in diamonds. No-trump would have resulted in eight.

When North made a balancing double of East's weak two-bid in spades, South responded three diamonds on a 10-point holding without feeling that he had underbid-with a 60 part-score he saw no reason to bid more. West led the spade jack, obviously a singleton in light of the opening bid, and south won with

TO SMITHEREENS

By Rosalyn Drexler. 187 pp. New American Library. $5.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

ROSALYN DREXLER has written well enough in some of her other books to make us wish to inquire patiently what went wrong with this one. The feeling one gets is that of an irrepressibly healthy woman trying to force a freakiness that does not come naturally to her. She seems almost to strain for irrelevancy, to struggle through a strenuous, willed free association in search of a fashionable zaniness, "To Smithereens" begins with the heroine, Rosa, sitting in the movles and feeling a hand on her thigh, A big, powerful girl, she crushes the hand in hers and says, "See you later... outside." In a few hours, she and Faul be-come lovers, but the trouble with him is that he never grows more interesting than this introduc-tion... he simply remains the sort of man who puts his hand on strange women's thichs in movies. Unconvincing as an art critic—his alleged métier—and as a lover, he is a feckless molester, no more.

Their conversations vacillate between an Ionesco-like absurdity and avant-garde pretentiousness. Rosa tells him that sometimes she writes down a single word for a whole page of her journal, like "broiled." He writes a lame art critic's "review" of her face. When he brings her a glass of water. she puts her finger in it and says, "Look, fat finger!" "Are you thinking of the number five?" she asks him, "because I just got a vibration of the number five." "I'm not thinking about any number," he answers. And so it goes.

At the age of 5, he confesses, he hid under the bed and cried because his mother was "tiny." At 14, he knocked her down for frying his eggs the wrong way. Now he wants "to be overcome by big: to be handled roughly by the last in line, the funky fat, the tough tomboy!" He can be potent, he tells us, only if she dominates him. They wrestle, et cetera, and he conceives the idea of turning her into a professional wrestler.

Mrs. Drexler was once a woman wrestler, and she could, if she chose, tell us what it was like. At least there would be a certain documentary value in describing a world so alien to our experience -but instead she turns the wrestling game into a parade of in-sufficiently grotesque grotesques. We are treated to a number of inconclusive conversations and get-togethers with women wrestlers. We meet a man whose daughter died of a ruptured stomach after a match, but the thing is presented in such a way as to rob it of any possible impact. We see the beginning of a homosexual counter with another female wrestler and the incident is abandoned as gratuitously as it was begun. In fact, the whole book is a series of gratuitous acts. We meet a painter who does a portrait of Rosa in a walk-on part; there is a character called "Mama Freak" who is as thresons as her name implies. A male wrestler starts an unprovoked fight, desists, vomits, disappears, The wrestling promoter gives a lecture on mucus. Paul reads an advertisement for a castle in Capri and has some boring asso-ciations to it. A dwarf writes a poem to Rosa and it is a had poem that could as easily have been written by a nondwarf, He exposes his body to Rosa's curiosity and, predictably, is sexually overdeveloped.

Paul goes to an exhibition called Art - Religion-Culture-Ha-Ha-Ha, where he climbs into a tinfol. lined coffin and has in it a me chanically—or humanly—induced sexual experience. He buys Ross some daisies. "We put them in an empty juice bottle. Set it on the window sill in the bedroom, Then we just grooved on the datsles ... in two days they were dead ... everything is mutilation." Mrs. Drexler writes as if she believes

It is not that she is being iron ical or toying with that old standby, the absurd. Rather, it seems as if she is avoiding the notion of causation, of one action being related to another. Nothing is necessary: everything is dispensable or interchangeable. The book is constructed like a happening Paul and Rosa witness at a party: a girl "climbed a platform rigged for the occasion and slowly began to throw down (one by one) long, flat pine sists... which created a random sculpture as they piled up."

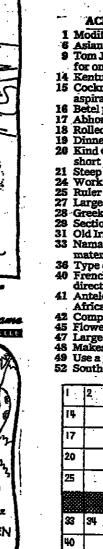

But a novel is not a random sculpture, a piling up of wooden scenes. Rosa and Paul do not become more real when they acquire a chameleon as a pet: it is just one more incident hovering awkwardly on the edge of in-choste symbolism. When a wrestler named Jean-who is without any other recognizable characteristic—introduces us to her mother and the old lady is made to -go on about eating baked potatoes with sour cream in Toffenetti's, this detail does not make her more convincing, but more prelevant and more forced, one more imposition on our patience.

A friend of Paul's has made a movie of Rosa's wrestling, and this opens to great expectations. But the movie has scarcely begun when it is interrupted by a bomb threat. And here Mrs. Drexler may have created a significant symbol at last. Only a bomb could get her out of the corner she's written herself into. Let's hope, too, that it brings all this latest nonsense down around her ears. Maybe then she can get i wrestling with the problem of genuinely felt fiction and throw it for a triumphant fall as she has in the past.

"Anybody'd get bored," he says, "hour after hour, arrow after arrow, shooting six, walking back and forth, shooting six. The gym gets cold as hell at one or two in the morning. You want to talk to someone. You don't want to be out here by yourself."

Yet almost any hour, every day finds Ward alone in Ft. Myer's, Va., shadowy gym, shooting arrows. Only part of the reason is a normal, understandable desire to win the first Olympic gold medal to be given in archery in 52 years to return to the days when he was world champio The Man With The Golden Aim," as Sports Hustrated magazine said. "The God of Archery," as the Japanese said.

Angry Dreamer

Inside Hardy Ward, 22, Army draftee from Mount Pleasant, Texas, is an angry dreamer, a man convinced that, if he tries hard enough, he can achieve pinnacles in the sport that would be untouched for perhaps generabest who ever lived. It'll bappen. One day I'll be recognized as maybe the greatest archer who ever lived."

Ward started shooting when he was 5, so young that his fingers now are misshapen and arthritic, "like a tree bent in the wind," he says. He must take constant medication to counter painful bur-sitis in both elbows. Ward's father, who never shot an arrow in his life, was his only coach. "I was shooting cardboard boxes out of Dad's hands at 10, 15, 20 yards when I was just a little bitty kid." Ward says. Now, with skill and trust amplified, he shoots playing cards, paper cups, and ping pong balls out of those hands, even ashes off his father's cigarettes. 50 Straight Victories

Ward has won 50 consecutive tournaments over a two-year span, 92 of the 102 he has entered, became the youngest to win the U.S. archery championship, at 16, and youngest at the time to take the world title. He won

In archery, shooting 1,200 points, of the maximum 1,440, is like running a four-minute m For many years people thought it could not be done, and even today only two or three Americans can shoot it with consistency. To Ward, 1,200 is a bore. He wants to hit 1,300.

Others Wonder

"Other archers get uptight when I tell them that," he says. They're still wondering how they're going to shoot a 1,200. How the hell you going to shoot 1,300s?' they ask 'I don't even dream about them.' Well, I tell them I do. That's why I'm shoot-

Secret amount is Ruchweld secret apparat is Buchwald a lawyer named William Rogers, an old friend of President Nixon's.

This is how the existence of this undercover agency was revealed when President Nixon went to China. He was seen in the company of a sandy-haired man who rarely left the President's side. Most reporters on the trip assumed he was a Secret Service man and paid no attention to him.

But then the President went to visit Chairman Mao Tse-tung and the newspapermen discovered that the sandy-haired man did not accompany Mr. Nixon. This knocked out the theory that the mysterious person was a Secret Service agent.

the person was doing on the trip, Ron Ziegler reluctantly admitted that the man's name was William Rogers and he held the title of Secretary of State and he had something to do with foreign affairs, though Ziegler refused to go into it any further.

Meanwhile, back in Washington, reporters were trying to find out more about the "State Department" and where it fitted into the diplomatic picture.

The White House seemed very disturbed about the-leak, and J. Edgar Hoover has been ordered

"If this is true, why all the mystery about the organization? Why hesn't the country heard about the State Department before? And why has the identity of William Rogers, as head of it, been kept a secret?"

"The President believes that there are certain agencies that When questioned about what can operate better if they are not publicized. If people knew what Mr. Rogers did, he would not have the freedom of movement that he has now. He can go anywhere in the world without being recognized. The President can assign him missions that would be impossible for someone as well known as Henry Kissinger to take. The State Department, because of its anonymity, has been able to perform a great service to the nation."

"Do you believe the gamble of taking Mr. Rogers to Peking was worth all the trouble that the State Department is now in?"

"That's Monday morning quarterbacking. From the beginning we were aware that it was a calculated risk to allow Mr. Rogers to be seen in such close proximity to the President. But at the time the decision was made, we had no idea that the built across the Bosporus to link President would meet Mao Tse-

From Gas Rings to Oscars

LONDON (THT).—Peter Finch might have been many things other than an actor. His father, George Ingle-Finch, was a distinguished physicist and mountaineer who was on Mallory's 1922 Everest expedi-tion. His grandmother, with whem he lived after his parents' divorce when he was 2, was an extraordinary lady who wore a gold headband, played the harp, knew Nijinsky, wrote pamphlets for Gandhi and who hauled Peter, aged 10, from Vaucresson France, where they had been living, to India, where he was apprenticed to a Buddhist priest, shaved head and all this parents had fits and had him promptly repairlated to his native Australia). As soon as Peter was old enough to leave school, he plunged into a series of jobs ranging from reporter to waiter.

It was a stint as straight man to a comedian during the Depression that decided him on acting:

"I've always thought that in a depression actors, who are always on the edge of a precipice, weather it better than others." he says. "I thought, why not go through life with these cheerful idiots, cooking baked beans on a gas ring."

The gas ring and baked beans were left behind years ago. Finch made his London stage debut in 1949, moving to films—"for the bread," he says-at a time when the big threat was being typecast in the war movies the British were churning out— You have to fight the naval hat, Johnny Mills used to say," Finch recalls. He avoided typecasting, a circumstance that he thinks may have stopped film from becoming really big box office. "The public is alarmed at somebody who can change

Consistently undervalued, in the words of one American critic ("He is the most eloquent underplayer since Ralph Richardson, and far less studied"), Finch has lived in Jamaica and Rome (he now lives in Lugano. Switzerland) and has recently appeared in several turkeys. Now, at the age of 55, comes his magnificent appearance in "Sunday, Bloody Sunday," one of the great screen performances of our time, which has made him a leading contender for the Best Actor Academy Award. His Oscar nomination is his first, and he is quite honestly delighted: "I don't have a dirty feeling about awards," he says. "The work comes first. If somebody gives you a prize it's very thrilling. Then you put the prize on the ward the end of the month they go to Hollywood, where Finch starts work on a musical version of "Lost Horizon," in which he plays the old Ronald Colman role. The Ross Hunter production will surely be big and glossy and commercial, which Finch thinks is just fine.

"I want that. I've been in some marvelous movies but they were a little esoteric," he says. "Anyway, I've just read the book again and it's marvelous."

If "Sunday, Bloody Sunday" has made Finch hot (a word he rightly loathes), there is a small miracle involved: he was not even cast in the picture to begin His role was played by Ian Bannen, who collapsed after two weeks of filming. Producer Joseph Janni sent for Finch, gave him the script and shrewdly said nothing until Finch had read it and loved Then Janni explained to Finch that he was a replacement. "There was no problem at all," says

Janni, who has made four pictures with Finch. "He's too professional and too intelligent to mind, he's not a man to be caught in jealousy."

Difficult as his role of the homosexual Jewish doctor was, Finch says it really did not pose great problems because the script was so good: "What is more difficult is when the character looks good in the script but isn't—then you have to blow life into

Schlesinger

"Sunday, Bloody Sunday" was Peter Finch's second film with director John Schlesinger. They also acted together in a war picture, "Battle of the River Plate."

"John says he was a terrible actor. I thought he was rather good. He got stuck in the German helmet—it's very unfair for a good Jewish boy, he never played anything but beastly Germans.

"I really think John is one of the greats. Being an actor, he knows when we get into knots, and he knows how to undo the face that he describes as gnarled, and a good deal of low-keyed charm, Peter Finch paces the room as he talks. He is nervous on the set, he says, but doesn't show it. If he had a choice, Peter Finch says he would again lead the odd, wandering life he led rather than study acting formally. "Ail you've done contributes," he says. It was doing radio drama that made him realize the possibilities of acting, though his actual discovery occurred in a glass factory in Australia where Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh saw him in "Le Malade Imaginaire."

Tallish and softspoken, with a brooding

At the time Finch was running a tiny traveling company, called the Mercury in deference to Orson Welles, that played shortened versions of the classics in factories during lunch hour.

"I was told the Oliviers were sitting with the glass blowers in the front, I was petrified," Finch recalls. The Oliviers en-couraged him, and put him under contract. It was thanks to them that he reached the London stage in 1949 and that he played Iago to Orson Welles's Othello in 1951, a production that Kenneth Tynan wickedly labelled "Citizen Coon."

"He said I played Iago as a bantamweight who'd lost," Finch said, laughing. He adored working with Orson Welles,

"During the last week of rehearsals Orson said, 'Carry on kids,' and went away. Everyone was frantic and sending wires everywhere. It turned out he was at a party in Venice. I love him.

"Another time some Method actors were going on and on. Orson took a long pole, got into the orchestra pit and started swinging it at us and yelling, 'Act you bastards. This is the Orson Welles method."

The fact that in "Lost Horizon" he will be making his musical debut doesn't worry Peter Finch unduly. "I've sung a couple of bathroom ballads. I'm not on an egotrip. If it works, it works. If not, they'll use someone else's voice."

Thinking of the time he was a 10-yearold apprentice Buddhist rather tickles Peter Pinch at the moment:

"Funny isn't it?" be says of "Lost Horizon." "Instead of playing the Ronald Colman part, one might be playing one of the lamas—for real."
